Overview for Today
Today is the 2nd of a two-day topic of money management.

Another questionnaire.

Two spreadsheets.

Assignments Today
Below are a list of to-do's for today.

1. There is a short questionnaire below. Please complete the questions and send the document back to me.
2. Complete the spreadsheet assignments from that section below.

Questionnaire 4
1. How bad did you feel yesterday about not trading for the day?
2. What did you learn (if anything) from this week's experience?

Money Management 201
Most traders, when they start out, have some type of beginner's luck. They open a demo account and take wild risks, and somehow everything turns out okay. Then they open a live account and get creamed.

Most of the time, this is due to the fact that whatever strategy a trader used on a demo account is not the same one they use with a live account. But it also has a lot to do with overtrading (a discipline problem).

Successful traders all pass through this first test. The ones that make it have simply done a better job at managing their money during this startup phase.

So, here are three rules of money management that will help you survive any down-time:

Start with less than you can lose
You should be able to afford the complete loss of your first live account. It's possible that you will make bad trades, or trade on emotion, or just have a terrible strategy. It's important that you are able to pick yourself up and start over. My first trading account
